[REDACTED] TNW Sites 15 businesses that owe you a big apology You don't have to be a bigwig at one of the worlds most famous companies to come out of apologies, faux pas, mistakes, or just pure malice. In fact, you might not even be working for a company at all. At any rate, we've made sure that there's a big ol' group of businesses out there that owe you an apology. Read on to see who we've included in the list, and feel free to add your own apologies (we have a digital list all ready). 2. Meetup Meetup is an app and site where people can go and meet up with other individuals who are interested in the same things they are. The idea came to founders Garrett Camp and Mike Laraway in a conversation after they were talking about how nice it was to see other New Yorkers doing the same things they were and could share a couple ideas together. From that conversation, the site was born. Meetup has been a huge success, and has raised an impressive amount of cash as well. 3. Ebay Ebay is a site that many of us have grown up with and relied on for everything from purchasing old vinyl records to groceries to furnishings. After its original design came to an end in 2001, Ebay revamped its interface and UX. The result was less inviting and more cluttered. In 2011, just one year after the site released its new design, they were running out of time to work on a new
