Kuan Lu Adobe says "Lightroom 5.2 Release Candidate is available to people through the Microsoft Office Connect Beta program. These early adopters can use the Lightroom 5.2 Release Candidate to create photos with adjustments and camera profiles with Photoshop Camera and Photoshop Lens Match. People can also create plots with Photoshop Lens Match and Time Machine. For all other features, including transitions, and uploading personal photos to the cloud, the Release Candidate 1 is the same as the final release of Lightroom 5.2."

I am totally amazed that they release the Lightroom 5.2 Preview now as it's still a Preview, isn't it? The same goes for the new Camera Raw 7, too, which also is a Preview, isn't it? I thought you were a software company why don't you release the real thing? Two months already have passed since the Previews went into circulation and already the Lightroom and Camera Raw Previews are Release Candidates! What's up with that? I would have thought that you want the buyers to have the "real" image processing software as soon as possible. I don't want to deal with the Previews, I want the Release Candidate which is a respectable version that is 100% identical to the final version. Please show some patience with your Previews!

Adobe has released version 20.1 for its software suite of creative applications, including Photoshop, Illustrator, InDesign, and Camera Raw. This release focuses on improvements to Performance, a new Camera Raw adjustment layer, Document Lab features, and filters for the Color Replacement feature. This release is conspicuously absent from the Mac App Store version, as released by the company earlier this month. Adobe's focus with Photoshop has been on performance and tools, with a limited amount of new features. However, the company did add a number of new features with the 2019 release of Photoshop, including Lens Correction, built-in HDR, and the return of Paint Bucket (before that was abandoned back in 2010!). The latest release brings back Auto-Orientation, which allows for greater control over repositioning objects or layers in Auto-Align mode Photoshop 2020 also supports the DCI-P3 colour space (formerly known as P3), which is an international standard for digital content. EPS files and text applied with the Unicode character set will now render with matching fidelity to the content. When you make changes to a layer, such as removing it entirely, the edit will be automatically saved to the original layer.

The layer system and the Blending Modes are the fundamental way to add realistic textures, colors, and effects to your shots. If you prefer to work with the Blending Masks panel for more precision and fine-tuning while nondestructively changing colors and attributes, that's fine too. The blending modes determine the colors in your image. For example, in Screen mode, the background goes completely white; in Motion Blur, the colors appear softer. Fortunately, Photoshop adjusts the brightness and color of the background color of the image automatically, so you don't have to do this manually. The redesigned Adobe Photoshop comes with many innovative and breakthrough features, including Adobe Sensei-powered AI and A.I. bot detection so you can enjoy the best of Artificial Intelligence without leaving the application. AI-powered features, such as familiar but smarter behaviour, machine learning and reinforcement and predictive technologies, are available from the context menu and accessible with quick and easy actions. As always, Photoshop has been designed to work seamlessly at the core of the Creative Cloud. You can now bring everything that makes the creative process faster, better and more collaborative, right from within the applications you use every day. Among the most exciting features is the Adobe Sensei-powered AI which will enable the creation of new features as well as a more fluid workflow, using Adobe Sensei-powered capabilities that bring the power of AI to every Photoshop user.
